

Contents

Preface to the fourth edition vii

Introduction: The information society: myth and reality xi

PART I THE HISTORICAL DIMENSION I

1 From script to print 3

The origins of writing 3

The alphabet 7

Images, sounds and numbers 10

The first media 12

The development of the book 14

Printing: the first communications revolution 16

The trade in books 20

2 Mass media and new technology 23

The pictorial image 23

The recording and transmission of sound 24

Mass media: radio and cinema 26

Television 28

Computers: the second communications revolution 30

PART 2 THE ECONOMIC DIMENSION 41

3 The information market-place 43

- The publishing industry: a paradigm of information transfer 43
- Authors and publishers 44
- The diversity of publishing 50
- New directions in publishing 54
- The impact of computers 58
- The interdependent media: convergence and change 63
- The market: definition and size 69
- Fragmentation or competition? 75

4 Access to information 77

- The price of books and the cost of broadcasts 78
- The cost of libraries 83
- Public good or private profit? 84
- Electronic communications: access and costs 86
- Networks: an electronic democracy? 90
- The world wide web 94
- Electronic publishing: towards a new paradigm? 97
- The cost of access: issues and problems 104

PART 3 THE POLITICAL DIMENSION 109

5 Information rich and information poor 111

- The value of information 111
- Information in developing countries: an issue defined 115
- Wealth and poverty: information and economic development 121
- Information delivery systems: some contrasts 123
- North and South: the world publishing industry 127
- Eastern Europe: a different poverty? 131
- The limits of wealth: information poverty in the West 132

6	Information, the state and the citizen	137
	The role of the state: an introduction	137
	The role of the state: the protection of intellectual property	138
	The role of the state: data protection and personal privacy	148
	The role of the state: freedom of information	153
	The role of the state: censorship	162
	Contemporary dilemmas: the issues redefined	167
	PART 4 THE INFORMATION PROFESSION	177
7	The information profession: a domain delineated	179
	The role of the information professional	182
	The work of the information professional	186
	Librarians and libraries: archetypes in transition	190
	From archivist to records manager	199
	Information managers	201
	Managing knowledge	205
	Afterword: An information society?	207
	A note on further reading	211
	Index	215